OSSIE GETS STUCK

OSSIE dawdled over a lemon phosphate as the guys planned the hot dog roast. "Of course, a couple of our more independent cohorts are going stag," quipped Robbie Moore, as he eyed Ossie meaningfully. Assuming what he considered to be a sophisticated demeanor, Ossie rose to the bait offered by his arch enemy. "Yup, that's me, fellas. Not a cookie in town can lure me from my bachelor life. Besides, I won't have to tramp around rustling chow for a chick. I'll concentrate on feeding my own face for a change. Man! I can taste those dogs now!"

A low grumble ran over the group. "I don't go for you guys coming without dates," chirped Ed Marks, "Then the rest of us are hopping to keep you from moving in on our gals." Ossie reassured him, "Don't fret, Eddie lad, I mean it when I say I'm not interested in a date for this wingding . . . my date, or anybody else's." Ed winked at the rest of the guys, "In that case it won't do me any good to try and line you up for a blind date with my cousin. She's really a nice gal." With this, Ossie snapped to attention. "Now gimme a chance to reconsider, pal, after all, it isn't as though new dolls were a frequent thing hereabouts." A bit more dickering back and forth and Ossie was scheduled to squire Marcie Marks to the doggie roast.

At first Robbie Moore didn't give it too much thought, going on the basis that most blind dates are thorough going busts and if Ossie got stuck with an ugly it would serve him right. But then as he ambled out of the soda shop, he overheard a couple of girls commenting on Ed Marks' good looks. "I'd give anything for a date with Eddie Marks," sighed the girl, "He's simply the best looking boy in town." This started Robbie to thinking. "If that's the way fluffs react to Marks," he mused, "maybe looks run in the family . . . maybe Ossie's blind date'll turn out to be a dream after all."

This horrible thought stirred Robbie to action. He cornered Ed Marks later in the day. "Sure was a dirty trick to stick your cousin with Ossie," he began. "Now just a minute, Robbie," said Ed, "Ossie may not be the lover boy you imagine yourself to be, but he's a good guy and I think Marcie will like him." Robbie looked bored, "Of course that depends on what kind of a dish this Marcie is. For all I know she's a Class B goner." Indignantly Ed whipped out his wallet. "It just so happens I have a picture of my cousin," he said heatedly and slapped the snapshot into Robbie's outstretched paw.

Robbie looked and did a mental, "WOW." Then he handed back the snapshot. "Hmm, not bad," he commented with obvious reluctance. Ed glared at him, accepted the picture without even looking at it and stalked away.

Robbie's fiendish plot went into swing later when he called Ossie on the phone. Ossie was immediately suspicious when he heard Robbie's voice but curiosity caught him. Finally Robbie got to the point. "You know, Ossie, ole' pal, I never gave you credit for many brains and I guess I was right," and as Ossie sputtered, he continued, "How many bright boys would stick their necks out for a blind date that's a friend's relative. After all, Ed had to fix her up . . . she's his cousin, ain't she?" Ossie regained his composure with an effort but inwardly he had grave doubts, "That's the chance ya take on a blind date, Robbie," he said weakly. "Yeah, an what a chance you're taking . . . I just happened to see a picture of this particular horror and brother, are you getting stuck . . . really pinioned."

Ossie's heart sank as he hung up the phone. The idea of an evening with a creep was hard to take. He argued with himself, his friendship with Ed coming to the fore, but at last he called his pal. "Listen Ed," he said with reluctance, "Er . . . I think I'll bow out on that blind date with your cousin . . ." Ed interrupted, "You haven't been talking to that skunk Robbie Moore, have ya?" Ossie admitted it and said, "Honestly Ed, I'd like to help you out but I don't want to get stuck with a . . ." Ed burst into loud guffaws. Mystified, Ossie pressed for an explanation. "Robbie got me so mad today," Ed chuckled, "That I whipped out my wallet and showed a picture I picked out to him. It just happened to be a picture of Marcie's sister, Mary Lou. And she's the beauty of the clan, man, a real crazy dish. Of course Marcie's nice but short on the looks. So when mom got me to ask her over for the doggie roast and . . ." The light shone. Ossie got to work fast. "Dollars that Moore calls you to ask for a date with Marcie," he started. "He already has," replied Ed, "And I'll call him right back and say okay. It'll be a dirty trick on poor Marcie, but she's got a sense of humor." "In the meantime," said Ossie, always pitching, "How about fixing me up with Mary Lou?"

The doggie roast was a riotous success. At the height of the festivities, Ossie, the gorgeous Mary Lou on his arm, passed a glum Robbie as he loaded up with hot dogs. Ossie commented enthusiastically as Mary Lou chatted with her sister. "Brother, if this is getting stuck, I wanna make it a permanent arrangement. Yahoo!" The defeated Robbie merely snapped at a hot dog.
